

A seed of happiness

Sea is mysterious.

It takes us into a state of spiritual calm, and we forget about skyscrapers, busy people of today, and tiring everyday life as watching it.

People adore sea as it is calm or it rolls with the wind, because people incline to its infinity.

The paintings of Giorgio Moiso make me think of sea that might exist in outer space beyond our knowledge. His paintings are like omnipotent space, where all living creatures are equal and coexist with each other in harmony.

They are results of deep philosophical speculation about human existence.

Even a mere wild flower has its mystery of being.

It does not need help of advanced technology to understand these mysteries. Just you need to be a philosopher for a while.

Isn't it fearful that the creativity of men resembles that of God?

Moiso's brush strokes involve all these meanings.

It took me so much time to prepare for this exhibition.

His paintings sometimes made me cry out, shook my core, or made me so happy as if I would have spent time with a true friend of mine.

How happy it is that life goes on!

It's been long that art is used for therapy.

Art therapy is considered one of the most important therapies for contemporary people who lost meanings of living.

One of the weaknesses that the contemporary art bears is that it could cause illness despite curing it.

I feel doubtful watching society of today in which sometimes superficial actions are considered as the essence of the matter.

However, the paintings by Giorgio Moiso bring us happiness, the meaning of living.

They bring you a seed of happiness if you appreciate the beauty in them with your heart.

In his paintings, there is an ideal world that we long for.
